

Teaching the Unchangeable Word

Why the "How" matters as much as the "What."

"Knowledge is only transformative if it is understood. My training at AA-MUSTED taught me that a teacher is a bridge-builder. In ministry, we often fail not because the Gospel is weak, but because our 'pedagogy'—the way we teach—is disconnected from how people learn."

I apply educational psychology to the pulpit. By understanding cognitive load and emotional resonance, I strive to make Systematic Theology accessible to the grandmother in the pew and the student in the university. A pastor must be more than a speaker; he must be a master educator who equips the saints by making the complex simple without making it shallow.
